

It is pathetic the President Bush vetoed the stem cell bill. Not because he vetoed it, but because it is his first veto in almost six years in office. And because he vetoed it for the wrong reason. He should have vetoed it because it was spending taxpayer dollars on an activity that some involuntary taxpayers consider murder, or an activity that could lead down the slippery slope to engineering humans.

It is sad that with half a trillion dollar deficit budgets in each of his years in office, he couldn't use his veto pen to hack away at those expenditures. But only a fiscal conservative or libertarian would do that.

Powell Gammill, candidate
US Congressional, AZ - 2